

Inner Certitude

Everything that has a beginning is subject to the laws of impermanence simply because it has a beginning.

Thus, human life too undergoes the process of birth, aging, sickness, pain and death. It is subject to the continual process of change: coming into being and passing away, coming into being and passing away.

And so we start to ask ourselves: Is that really all there is? Surely somewhere there must be something lasting? And just this alone; our desire for stability, bliss, and security is a constant indication of the presence of a higher reality.

It is this inner certainty, this inner knowledge imparted to us of our immortal divine nature.

Becoming Transparent

The more a person is prepared to surrender himself to the Absolute, the more he will be granted grace as the action of divine Essence. And the more it acts in him, the more he is capable of ever greater and steadfast self-surrender. Surrendering oneself to the Eternal means opening oneself and becoming transparent to the transcendental. It means letting go and becoming empty in the form of opening up to and thus becoming filled by the all-embracing wholeness of divine being.
